

Planning an inclusive meeting

Sarah Morley

The purpose of this study, conducted as a literature review, is to identify the trends and issues investigated thus far in the area of inclusive, accessible, and disability tourism. As medicine and technology are constantly advancing, there are more opportunities for people with disabilities to travel. Quality of life is an important consideration for all people, including people with disabilities; for many, travel and leisure is an integral part of their quality of life. This study includes topics such as air, rail, boat travel, accommodations, meetings, laws and regulations, and perceptions and attitudes with regard to inclusive tourism.
